

Cricket Poem by Hemant

The morning sun shines on the grass so green,
The grandest stadium that you have ever seen,
The crowd is roaring, the flags fly high,
Underneath the bright and open summer sky.

The bowler starts his run with pace and might,
The batsman focuses, keeping the ball in sight,
A sudden flash of leather, a mighty swing,
The sweet sound of willow makes the stadium ring.

The ball goes flying high into the air,
The fielders chase it down with desperate care,
It crosses the rope, the umpire signals four,
The scoreboard ticks, and the fans shout for more.

Then comes the spinner with a tricky turn,
A burning desire for a wicket to earn,
The ball beats the bat, the bails fly away,
A silent stadium, nothing left to say.

The captain walks in with pressure on his mind,
Looking for the gaps that he needs to find,
With quick singles and doubles, they build the score,
Fighting for the team, fighting till the core.

The final over arrives, the tension is high,
Every single fan lets out a nervous sigh,
Six runs needed off the very last ball,
The ultimate test for the biggest stage of all.

A massive hit sends it straight to the crowd,
The stadium erupts, passionate and loud,
More than just a game played with a bat and ball,
Cricket is a religion that unites us all.

On every street where young dreamers play,
The sound of cricket brightens the day,
With hope in heart and bat held high,
They chase their dreams beneath the sky.

From village grounds to stadium lights,
Cricket fills our days and nights,
A game of courage, joy, and art,
Forever living in every heart.

When teamwork rises with every call,
One brave heart can inspire them all,
Win or lose, the spirit stays bright,
Cricket keeps our dreams in flight.